Items 31–39

Instructions: Read the following extract carefully and then answer Items 31–39 on the basis of what is stated or implied.

“Don’t take it to heart, Shark, life’s got plenty lessons to teach you yet, pardner; this bush does reduce you to an animal and then you got to fight your way back to prove you are a man. You better get moving, and don’t let sundown catch you before you reach Nameless River.”

I left half of my supplies with Bullah and Tonic, poured boiling water into the barrel of my rifle, tested the action of the bolt and set out. I knew Bullah and Tonic were watching me but I didn’t look back. I walked quickly, feeling my prospecting knife slapping against my thigh. The forest darkened, and my footsteps sounded loud under the tall trees. I wasn’t afraid of animals or snakes, and for the first time, I felt certain that I would overtake my uncle and Santos. The only fear I knew was for the thing I was about to do with no witness but God and the forest trees.

10 But this fear was remote as I swung downhill. The sense of being alone filled me with a particular gladness. I looked up at the sun and quickened my pace. I saw Nameless River from a hill top. The molasses-black stream flowed by a hundred yards away. For a long time I stood still watching every movement below and scanning the far bank of the river. I descended stealthily until I came to a mora tree which leaned over the river. I hid my balata pouch between the roots
15 and crouched down to wait.

Items 40–47

Instructions: Read the following passage carefully, and then answer Items 40–47 on the basis of what is stated or implied.

Of all the terrifying circumstances to which one's home is vulnerable, nothing equals the experience of having a guest who stares straight at one's bookshelves. It is not the possibility that he is judging one's taste that is frightening, but the fact that one's sense of discrimination is exposed by one's books. Indeed, most people would prefer to see the guest first scan, then peer and turn away in 5 boredom or disapproval. Too often the eyes, dark with calculation, shift from title to title, as from girl to girl in an overheated dance hall. Nor is that the worst. It is when those eyes stop moving that the heart too stops. The guest's body twitches. His hand floats up to where his eyes have led it. There is nothing to be done. You freeze. He smiles. You hear the question even as it forms: "Would you mind if I borrowed this book?"

10 (Mind? Why should I mind? The fact that I came upon that book in a Paris bookstall in April 1959 – the 13th I believe it was, the afternoon, it was drizzling – that I found it after searching all Europe and North America for a copy; that it is dog-eared at passages that mean more to my life than my heart-beat. Should I mind that you seek to take all that away? That I will undoubtedly never get it back? Then even if you actually return it to me one day, I will be wizened, you cavalier, and the 15 book spoiled utterly by your mishandling? Mind?)

"Not at all. Hope you enjoy it."

"Thanks. I'll bring it back next week."

"No rush. Take your time."

[Liar.]

20 Not that there is any known way to avoid these exchanges. One has books; one has friends; they are bound to meet. Charles Lamb, who rarely complained, waxed livid on the subject: "Your borrowers of books – those mutilators of collections, spoilers of the symmetry of shelves, and creators of odd volumes." But how are such people to be put off? The non-return of borrowed books is a custom as old as books themselves.

25 Still this custom contradicts nature. In every other such situation, the borrower becomes a slave to the lender. This is certainly true with money. Yet it is not at all true with books. For some reason a book borrower feels that a book, once taken, is now his own. This removes both memory and guilt from the transaction. Making matters worse, the lender believes it too.

Source unknown

40. According to the writer in lines 1–9, what is the most frightening thought that occurs when a guest stares at your bookshelves?

- (A) He will be bored by your selection of books.
- (B) He would ask to borrow one of your favourite books.
- (C) He might show disapproval of your taste in books.
- (D) He will be distracted from the important business at hand by looking at your books.

41. The guest looks "from title to title, as from girl to girl in an overheated dance hall" (lines 5-6). This comparison is intended to suggest a feeling of
- (A) anticipation
 - (B) frustration
 - (C) confusion
 - (D) maliciousness
42. The writer uses a series of short sentences in lines 7-8 to suggest his feeling of
- (A) pleasure
 - (B) disbelief
 - (C) excitement
 - (D) apprehension
43. The writer, in paragraph 2 (lines 10-15), describes in detail how he obtained the book in order to
- (A) explain to the reader why he is so attached to the book
 - (B) make the guest aware of how he came to own the book
 - (C) show the reader that he did not mind if the guest borrowed the book
 - (D) give his guest the background necessary to understand what the book is about
44. The word "Mind?" (line 15) is written in italics because the author wishes to emphasize
- (A) how much he minds lending his book to his friend
 - (B) that his thoughts are not spoken aloud to his friend
 - (C) how much of a history the particular book has
 - (D) that he does not mind at all lending the book to his friend
45. In line 19, the writer uses square brackets to indicate that the word in these brackets
- (A) is an expansion of those not in brackets (lines 16-18)
 - (B) parallels those words not in brackets (lines 16-18)
 - (C) contradicts those words not in brackets (lines 16-18)
 - (D) is there to emphasize those words not in brackets (lines 16-18)
46. "One has books; one has friends; they are bound to meet" (lines 20-21). This statement implies that it is
- (A) unusual to have neither books nor friends
 - (B) inevitable that books will be borrowed by one's friends
 - (C) possible to avoid such meetings by hiding away one's books
 - (D) impossible to have a friend who does not want to keep one's books
47. According to the writer, which of the following is TRUE?
- (A) The borrower of books never raises the question of money.
 - (B) The borrower of books only returns the books because of a sense of guilt.
 - (C) The borrower is more inclined to remember books than money.
 - (D) The borrower of money becomes a slave to the lender.

Items 48–55

Instructions: Read the following letter carefully and then answer Items 48–55 on the basis of what is stated or implied.

This is an open request to try to find who is the ‘brain’ behind traffic management in Paolo. Does anybody know? I have tried Traffic Branch, not them; Highways, not them; Planning & Development, not them; in fact nobody wants to take responsibility for certain decisions and the mess that results.

- 5 For example, Mission Road was made one-way, north to south. Great idea! It worked, no traffic jams. In fact, many people were charged for going the wrong way up a one-way street. Then suddenly it’s back to two-way and traffic for so! Same is true of Stoke Street. Somebody changed the ‘Stop’ signs at the corner for a few weeks, then they changed it back; nobody knows why.

10 But the best is Celestial Road in St John which is ‘Wrecker Heaven’. Somebody made this road, which, apart from Broadway, is the widest street in Paolo, a ‘no parking’ street, either side, any time, and the ‘Wrecker’ is profiting from this.

There are four major office buildings on this road, all of which provide underground parking for staff, so some (usually the lower paid) have to park elsewhere and there are the persons whose cars the wrecker is taking away all day, everyday. Again the small man suffers!

- 15 Oh! there is an exception: if you have a Canadian High Commission sticker you can park and the wrecker will not touch your ‘Diplomatic’ car. Maybe we could all become Diplomats!

Then again, the two narrowest streets in Paolo allow parking; try Delino Street off Abby Lane, you can hardly pass!

- 20 Who is the ‘brain’ behind this mess? It seems the more cars we put on the road, the less parking somebody wants to allow. Who is this brain? No doubt a small man with a BIG, BIG car who has no name!

Source unknown

48. The writer’s use of the word “brain” (line 1) is meant to

(A) make fun of the decisions
(B) exaggerate the traffic problems
(C) create a comparison of streets
(D) compliment those responsible

49. When the writer repeats “not them” in paragraph 1, he implies that

(A) he is choosing someone to complain to
(B) no one knows who is in charge of the traffic management
(C) no one wants to accept responsibility for the traffic situation
(D) he is searching diligently for the person in charge of traffic

50. "Stoke Street" (line 7), "Celestial Road" (line 9) and "Delino Street" (line 17) can BEST be considered as
- (A) assigned parking places for diplomats
 - (B) examples to support the writer's case
 - (C) prohibited streets for all drivers
 - (D) streets that attract a lot of attention
51. The writer's tone can be described as
- (A) puzzled
 - (B) resigned
 - (C) sarcastic
 - (D) complimentary
52. The last sentence of the letter is similar to paragraph 5 because both of them
- (A) mention cars
 - (B) express disgust
 - (C) are complimentary
 - (D) contain rhetorical questions
53. The letter was MOST likely published in a
- (A) newspaper
 - (B) press release
 - (C) tourist brochure
 - (D) school magazine
54. The author of this passage is MOST likely a
- (A) motorist
 - (B) pedestrian
 - (C) traffic warden
 - (D) government official
55. "Again the small man suffers!" (line 14) implies that the small man is often
- (A) ignored
 - (B) disadvantaged
 - (C) the one who is wrong
 - (D) discriminated against
